P) Proposal Details

P.1) This is a proposal for:

New certificate or minor track within an existing BOR approved Baccalaureate or Graduate program

Home Program

The home program is BA Sociology.

The proposal is for an Optional Track/Specialization in Island Environment and Indigenous Sociology in the BA Sociology program. Planned first certificate to be awarded in Fall 2019.

P.2) Proposal Summary

The proposed track is pursuant of the Hawai'i Papa Ke Ao O (HPOKA) and seeks for it to be designated as such. All students able to pursue this track are Sociology Majors at UH Hilo who are expected to fulfill the requirements of a Sociology Undergraduate Degree. The track is considered rigorous and students will need to be committed to indigenous sociological learning, research, and community service. The specialization does NOT alter the requirements of attaining a BA in Sociology but instead offers an opportunity for a recognized focus in island environment and indigenous sociology.

P.3) Proposal Rationale/Justification

The modification was motivated by Sociology Majors who were interested in focusing on the sociology of the Hawai'i context and other indigenous communities and environmental and social matters particularly as they impact islands. More than half our majors identify as Native Hawaiian, part Native Hawaiian, or other indigenous groups including PI communities as well as other first peoples. In addition, participation in Uluākea, and understanding the mission of the Hawaii Papa Ke Ao has helped bring this specialization to fruition. The track does not impact other programs at the university however I have presented the proposal to HWST at UH Hilo and HawCC and the Division of Social Sciences at HawCC for the purpose of articulation and bridging this specialization with other program.

Furthermore, there is no such specialization in Sociology across the UH System. This would place UHH sociology in a leadership position for participating the mission of the HPOKA. The specialization would be the first of its kind and would be attractive to majors in related disciplines. Depending on the success of the track it could evolve into a minor. Finally, the specialization may also support students interested in the internship track in TCBES and the future development of an indigenous/social science concentration in TCBES.

P.4) Related Course(s)

Required:

SOC 253 Island, Indigenous & Env. Soc (3 credits) (new course proposal concurrently submitted)

Required (three) 9 Credits:

SOC 408 Island Feminism

SOC 370 Political Economy of Hawai'i

SOC 430 Social Change (focus - World Systems and Hawai'i, Hawai'i Social Movements)

SOC 377 Feminist Social Theory (name change to Indigenous Feminism concurrently submitted)

SOC 470 Indigenous Health and Well-Being

DRAM/SOC 243: Drama of Hawai'i & the Pacific

Required:

SOC 391 Internship (3 credits) with an organization or government office that serving Native Hawaiian and/or Indigenous communities.

Required:

SOC 440 Senior Research Thesis (3 credits) in Indigenous or Island Studies based in relative indigenous research protocols (new course proposal concurrently submitted)

P.5) Course(s) from Other Departments

Yes

Courses

Elective:

DRAM/SOC 243: Drama of Hawai'i & the Pacific (proposal being put forth by Justina Mattos)

P.6) Proposal Impact(s) - Resources

The sociology department is understaffed after losing a faculty member to retirement and increasing our the number of our majors in the last few years. Our next hire when awarded will be in the area of indigenous/environmental sociology. No other additional staffing is necessary.

Additional Information:

Additional sociology elective courses may be added to the Indigenous and Island Sociology track but must adhere to the following practices or principles:

- Syllabus subheadings must be bi-lingual ('olelo Hawai'i/English)
- 35% of authorship must be indigenous and/or Native Hawaiian, or Islander.
- 50% of course content must focus on indigenous communities, Hawai'i, or island societies.
- Indigenous perspectives orientation - focus on indigenous/Native Hawaiian knowledge production, socio-historical understanding of indigenous/Native Hawaiian and island processes, practices, social organization, governance, political economy, community formation and more for the purpose of shifting the focus "away from postcolonial studies and the effects of colonization to the contributions and potential of Indigenous worldviews" and in benefit to native communities (see ku'ualoha ho'omanawanui's Voices of Fire: Reweaving the Literary Lei of Pele and Hi'iaka, 2014, University of Minnesota Press, 'Ōlelo Mua/Introduction: Ke Ha'a lā Puna i ka Makani (Puna Dances in the Breeze) for a lucid discussion of resurfacing indigenous intellectual traditions).

Curr Coord Notes:

12/10/18: Per Email from K. Furumo, deleted the 2 HWST Hula Courses and 1 HWST elective course from the optional specialization.

1.2) Program Description

Sociology students develop a critical understanding of social events and processes, resting on an underlying appreciation of social theories and the insights these yield about the structure of societies, the processes embedded in these structures, the nature of social change, and how all of these affect people in their everyday lives. Sociology majors and minors should also develop basic skills in sociological research including quantitative and qualitative methods. In-depth courses of specific social groups such as indigenous communities, genders and sexualities, and race and ethnicity should create an understanding of the interconnectedness of social events and processes as well as how social research informs us to develop an understanding of society. Both major and minor options are organized around basic courses in statistics, research methodology, and theory. In addition, sociology majors have the option taking a specialized track in Island and Indigenous Sociology focused on the social and environmental conditions of island and indigenous societies.

Sociology students develop a critical understanding of social events and processes, resting on an underlying appreciation of social theories and the insights these yield about the structure of societies, the processes imbedded in these structures, the nature of social change, and how all of these affect people in their everyday lives. Sociology majors and minors should also develop basic skills in social research, equipping them to apply what they have learned in real-life settings. In-depth study of specific social groups and organizations such as the institutions of family, religion, education, polity, and the economy should create an understanding of the interconnectedness of social events and processes as well as how social research informs us and helps to develop understanding of causal processes. The UH Hilo Sociology program provides students with broad preparation in the basics of scientific sociology. Both the major and minor options are organized around a core of basic courses in statistics, research methodology, and theory. In addition, the faculty offer topical courses in a variety of subfields including family, ethnicity, religion, education, social psychology, populations, organizations, and aging. The core and topical offerings are complemented by practicum courses in applied sociology and social research in which students apply their newly acquired knowledge in a hands-on fashion in community agencies and/or actual research settings.
