Think I did it correctly. Please check. As per Resh's clarification, not all PLO were used. I did not use PLO 3 since quantitative methods will not be required for this Certificate. I believe the others are all either closely aligned or general enough to be captured through the certificate requirements.

Global Studies Academic Subject Certificate

Certificate Outcomes

The following learning outcomes have been identified for the Global Studies ASC

1. Cultural Awareness

Demonstrate awareness of and sensitivity to other cultures' norms, practices and actions while at the same time recognizing the unique attributes of our own culture.

2. World Languages

Speak and write in another language while recognizing and respecting the importance of language diversity (all languages) in global communication.

3. Global Citizenship

Recognize self as a part of global culture by demonstrating awareness of the interdependence of global systems: by understanding how the U.S. may be perceived world-wide; by solving problems with multiple perspectives and variables; and by making globally responsible decisions.

About the Certificate

The interdisciplinary Global Studies Academic Subject Certificate is designed to integrate student learning across disciplines and programs and foster connections between disciplinary learning, world languages, and study abroad experiences. This summative experience will have students earn a certificate to document their international and intercultural experience and credentials.

The certificate requires a total of 16 credits of international coursework. Students will take at least three credits of world language study, at least three credits of internationalized courses, and an education abroad experience. Language study is a mandatory component of the certificate but can only total six credits out the 16. This results in competency in both international studies and world languages.

Students must also participate in an education abroad experience. A wide range of options, including short-term programs, is provided to meet the needs of community college students with family and work responsibilities. Alternatively, students with more flexible schedules can complete certificate requirements through a semester- (or longer) abroad experience.
